

---

WK - NW 34 knots!

Posted by stu - 2003/09/22 13:48

---

Me and the boy wonder have just got back from a morning sail at WK, it was pretty windy and bloody cold!

People were getting overpowered on 4.5s when we left!

Andys board seemed ok after it got run over, too!

See you down there later this evening!

=====

WK - NW 34 knots!

Posted by justal - 2003/09/22 21:07

---

Hope you all had a good one.... Its been howling here (Borth) all day too... Perfect 4.5m and wave board weather. The sun was shining the waves were big and I had the whole beach to myself!! Beautiful!!

Al.

=====

WK - NW 34 knots!

Posted by Cookie-Monster - 2003/09/23 09:10

---

Well I feel sorry for all you boys up north having to sail in such cold conditions, Hayling Island was brilliant sunshine and around 20oC, 20+ knots, 5m sails, head high waves and the wind was cross on, as the day went on it swung to a perfect cross shore wind reletive to the waves.

A very good day was had by all, particularly as the rain came in after a good sail and gave my kit a good clean.

Keep sailing in sub-arctic conditions, break out the winter suits and flasks of hot chocolate, I've got to get out the sun tan cream and the shorty suit.....

=====

WK - NW 34 knots!

Posted by Ernie - 2003/09/23 09:58

---

Any one feeling sore this morning ?

...aftr the first REAL wind for quite some time !!!!

---

WK - NW 34 knots!

Posted by Shawn - 2003/09/23 10:21

---

Quote: Any one feeling sore this morning ?

...aftr the first REAL wind for quite some time !!!!

34kts - no wonder I feel like I ran a marathon and got mugged twice en-route!! If it didn't hurt like hell, the state of my hands would be quite amusing - in addition to the usual raw bloody patches I've acquired a fine set of large gouges and bruised nails on the ends of both little fingers - where they kept getting trapped in the boom as I flew off the board backwards as a result of many 'not quite right' vulcan attempts. Never thought I'd say this, but I hope it's not windy for a few days at least, don't think I could take it.

---

WK - NW 34 knots!

Posted by MRG - 2003/09/23 12:58

---

Well I am not feeling sore, rather green with Envy. Big Bro told me to throw sick but my conscience and the needs of UK infrastructure system persuaded me otherwise. I now feel I have let myself down as any promise of wind for the weekend has all but vanished. Robbing ba$tards those wind gods.

---

WK - NW 34 knots!

Posted by Ernie - 2003/09/23 13:00

---

...for heavens sake say nice things about them otherwise it'll be another 7 week wait for wind

---

WK - NW 34 knots!

Posted by stu - 2003/09/23 15:35

---

Last night was definately better than yesterday morning.

Got out kitesurfing this morning too, but it was pretty offshore and gusty. Some nice little waves on Tanskeys though, a few feet more and it would have been superb.

Thanks for the ride home Lee!