
Reset the Clock!

Posted by stu - 2010/03/19 08:58

Finally, after 111 days of no windsurfing, yesterday I managed to reset the clock at Rhosneigr!

Wasn't a classic sail, and to be honest it's going to take a few sessions to get back to where I was, but it was good and quite a few others out, too! Quite funny to see so many people making silly mistakes, I'd forgotten which way to roll out my new sails, couldn't turn my new board for the first hour and fell on every bottom turn. However at the end was starting to get the feeling back and today have that inner glow, which is a bit like wetting yourself in public. Everybody can see it, but only you can feel the inner warmth...!

Was deeply jealous seeing you guys on the webcam as I sat at my desk, not least as the weekend forecast is both poor and all over the place.

Just nice to get out to play after such a long lay off.

Hey Duncan,

I was on a green/yellow Severne S1 and a bright green board. What gear were you on? Saw a lad who may have been you, but when I asked him if his name was Duncan, he said no and went very quiet. I think he thought I was going to mug him.

Think I'm going to head to Hells Mouth now, should be some wind and a wave...

No, it's a Nude nudeboards.com.au

Got Hells Mouth today, really offshore but good fun. Think Tuesday at Rhosneigr should be good...

Stu

which forecast you looking at?

working at Rhyl in the morning so will take the gear in the hope there's some wind or waves to play on further along. May finally get the SUP out. It's only been in the garage a year or so.

Later
bob
